The invention relates to catheter assemblies for implantation or insertion in blood vessels or other internal cavities of the human or animal body. The catheter assemblies of the present invention may be used for implantation of a variety of different types of devices such as stents, stent grafts, drug delivery devices, occluders, occlusion balloons, occlusion filters and others. The invention is specifically directed to stent graft assemblies. By way of background, at the present time in the field of intravascular implantable medical devices (i.e., catheter assemblies) for implantation of stent grafts within the body there are two distinct, competing methods for deployment of such devices. The first is to deliver the stent graft to the location of need and then deploy the stent graft by the use of a balloon catheter. While this method works well, it is possible for there to be a problem with respect to the shape of the deployed stent graft. The second known method is to deliver the stent graft to the location of need within the body and then deploy it by passing a sheath-like member, such as a hypotube or a sheath, over a stent graft and then withdrawing the sheath from the stent graft.
