Merkle CAT service.Q: Disable mass emails from Drupal 7 Is there any way to disable mass emails on Drupal 7? I don't want to use any module to send mass emails. I am able to send emails using cron jobs. Thanks A: How often will you be sending out email? If it's only once, it won't bother you. If you're using a cron job, you could set that up to just send an email on the first run of your script. You might also be able to combine that with the Email API to only send the email if some other condition has been met. Another way to consider it, is that if you're sending out multiple emails, but not checking for more than one at a time, you may as well send them out one after another. This has the obvious benefit of not sending multiple emails at once (though the email address could get spammy), but also doesn't require a solution like the one above. I'd advise using the Email API. If you're going to use it to send out multiple emails simultaneously, you could consider using an SMTP provider like Gmail's SMTP API. You may also need to make sure you're using the latest version of Drupal 7: SMTP is now officially deprecated in Drupal 7. Also, remember that using cron jobs for mass emails can be troublesome. Some will require PHP modules to be enabled, and other things that you're probably not familiar with yet. Also, using a cron job could be sub-optimal in terms of sending out your emails. How often will you be running the script? Sending out 1000 emails takes time. I guess an option to consider would be not using Drupal for this use case, like AWS SES or SendGrid for your send out.
